HONGKONG, 12TH JULY, 1864.

The following passengers proceed per P. & O. Co.'s steamer Malta, To-day, at 2 P.M., for Bombay, &c.:—

For Southampton.—Mrs. Boxer, Mrs. Murray and 2 children and European servt., Capt. Pinhey, Capt. Murray, R.A., Dr. Home, M.D., Messrs. J. Haig, J. Purvois, Gosling, S. A. Liddell, Tranneck, J. Neats, and Miss Morrison.

For Marseilles.—The Hon. Sir F. Bruce and servt., and Mr. Dudgeon.

For Alexandria.—Messrs. A. Scott, and Varco.

For Singapore.—Messrs. Cargill, J. Leyenthel, Barnes, and T. Ball.

For Bombay.—Messrs. W. Boyd, and Derabjee.

On Friday last a party of Police proceeded with a warrant to enter a gambling house in Taipingshan, and finding the door closed they forced it open and discovered then that the house was empty. Not feeling satisfied with this, they demanded admittance to a house adjoining, which having obtained, they proceeded to search the premises, and seeing a man lying in bed, they pulled him out, and thrusted him off to the central station, charging him with being connected with the gamblers in the other house. It is alleged that almost unnecessary violence was resorted to by the police; be that as it may, the poor man died in the charge room, a few minutes after he reached there. A woman in the house states that the Policemen, who were Europeans, behaved most brutally to the man, and one of them struck her a violent blow in the face with his fist.

They were on Saturday examined before the Magistrate, by whom they were remanded till today (Tuesday) to prepare the depositions, when they will be committed for trial.

An inquest was held on Saturday on the body of of the Chinaman, which resulted in a verdict to the effect that the deceased had died from apoplexy accelerated by over excitement. Dr. Murray who had made a post mortem examination of the body, says it is his opinion that such was the cause of death. We understand, that both Mr. Thilland and Mr. Kingsmill are retained to prosecute the policemen.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

ROBBERY.—On Saturday night thieves gained entry to the Station house near the reservoir on Pok-fu-lum, through a window which was left open, and carried off some muskets, ball ammunition and various articles of wearing apparel. Suspicion is entertained that the Police watchman must be implicated in the robbery as he has accordingly been taken into custody.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—Another Chinaman was attacked and robbed on the Pok fu-lum Road on Saturday night. The highwaymen were five in number, and one of them wounded the victim with a sword. One of the culprits was apprehended by a constable, the others escaped through the village of Shuk-tong-tsoy.

BURGLARY.—The house of a Sergeant in the military store was on Saturday entered by thieves and articles of jewellery carried off.

BI-MONTHLY SUMMARY.

(From the China Overland Trade Report.)

THIS publication was last produced under date of 20th Ultc., for transmission, per mail steamer "China," despatched the succeeding day. The following is a summary of the information therein contained:—

The hordes of robbers, known as Nienfei, which were menacing Hankow, had retired, apparently from no other cause than respect to the British radial scheme. No progress had been made during the preceeding fortnight in the suppression of the rebellion in the provinces of Chekiang and Kiang-su; the Ningpo still holding the important cities of Hangchow in the former province, and Nanking in the latter, without any tangible prospect of their being ousted. The suppression of the rebellion appeared an unlikely contingency without foreign aid, as the Taiping Wong had at his back and hall, these ruthless Kwangsi veterans who neither give nor take quarter, and whose prowess the Imperial soldiery hold in great dread. An incursion into the province of Chekiang on his part is by no means an improbable event, and although the British radial scheme and other ingenious modes of interference might ultimately again drive the rebellion back, still the waste of blood would be fearful and destructive of the great districts great. The possibility of such a contingency was deemed strongly illustrative of the great defect of British policy as now pursued in China. Had diplomacy been applied to its proper purpose, and the maintenance of a suitable Imperial force been made the consideration of the British protection at the time when the Mandarin cause was otherwise hopeless, the perpetuation of the rebellion and the intensification of its horrors by the adoption of half measures of intervention would have been averted.

Colonel Gordon's retirement from the Imperial service was attributed to the jealousy of the Mandarins, who have been extremely susceptible and distrustful of foreigners since the unscrupulous attempt of Mr. Lay to secure to himself the exclusive direction of the Anglo-Chinese fleet. The subject was deemed important as being indicative of the difficulty of rendering tangible assistance to the Mandarins.

The intelligence from Japan was rather clearing, as matters were the appearance of the Tycoon having been over-diplomatized. The excuses and pretexts of his subtle government to the effect that the leading hostile Daimios were beyond his control, has been accepted as the truth, although it is perfectly well known that the Gorogio have but to stone unturned to accomplish the expulsion of foreigners from the country. The line of policy adopted by the British has been to maintain the Tycoon's government by way of averting a war; to keep a large fleet in the bay of Yedo so as to render the threat of expulsion important; and to deal with such of the leading hostile Daimios, as might openly declare their resistance to foreign intercourse. In this manner, under coercion, the Prince of Satsuma had seceded from the anti-foreign party. The Prince of Natsio, who has fortified the Straits of Simonoseki, would it was understood be the next attacked, and as the position commands the navigation of the Inland Sea, it will probably be retained as a material guarantee.

Since then political affairs have anything but improved. It seems that although the immediate vicinity of the Capital is free from marauders, yet that the roads a little distance off are so entirely infested with mounted highwaymen, as to fully account for the prostration of trade at Tientsin.

The policy pursued by the British Minister at Peking continues the conclusion of the war, in his blind subservience to Mandarin pretensions, has ever been strongly animadverted on in this Legation. The workings of Sir F. Bruce's mind appear to be singularly impelled by animosity to the British Mercantile community of China. His Excellency in the first instance, whilst the war was proceeding, embarked warmly in the Foreign Customs Inspectorate arrangement, the revenues whereof enabled the Imperial Government to fortify and to strike the Peiho in such a manner, that when he went thither for the purpose of exchanging the ratifications of the Tientsin treaty, the force he took with him was beaten off, after the lives of upwards of four hundred of his countrymen had been sacrificed under his eyes.

The perfidious spectacle made no difference in his Excellency's predilections, for he still clung to the prostitution of Consulate, military, and naval authority, to carry out his Custom scheme.

Another campaign was the result. An allied expedition of British and French forces was concentrated on Peking. On the march thither Capt. Brabazon, Capt. Anderson, and others, were captured by Imperial troops under a flag of truce, and put to a most cruel death by torture. The Capital was virtually captured, and the convention of Peking signed, which provided a residence at the Central Hospital for Sir F. Bruce. He declined to reside there and left the palace assigned to the British Legation in charge of a student Interpreter until the following Spring, when it became clear that the Mandarins had really been humbled.

This great desideratum, which had cost the allies, especially the British, years to accomplish should never have been lost sight of. But Sir Frederick's whole and sole object appears to have been to throw the lesson which had been administered to the Mandarins away, and it appears that he has succeeded to an extent positively alarming. This blind infatuation is the more to be wondered at, in that he had not only seen the detestable perfidy and horrible cruelty of the Mandarins; he had not only been a victim to their overbearing pride and repellent bauteur; he had not only experienced the absolute necessity of humbling them before they could be brought to terms—but in his subsequent intercourse with them, he had repeated occasion to animadvert, in his despatches, on their venality, their cowardice, their ignorance and incapacity, their bad faith and their deceit.

Still his sole aim and object appears to have been to have a palace of the first class to live in and to secure influence at Court, to obtain which he prostituted all his functions in relating to the Mandarins. In their hands he supplied them with arms, munitions of war, and drill instructors, when the fate of the Empire depended on the capture of Shanghai by the Taipings, the Mandarins not having a shadow of resistance to show, he caused the insurgents to be driven back by British troops, he established the radius scheme at the open ports and kept open the communications between them—thereby securing to the Imperial government the possession of those ports, the Customs revenue, and so ultimately to open up the whole country to foreign intercourse and its opium. He wrested Ningpo from the hands of the Taipings and ultimately virtually transferred it to the Mandarins, but he placed the latter in a position to prevent foreign intercourse with the insurgents, which so far as British subjects are concerned, he interdicted. He not only allowed but he encouraged Customs officers who might seize British owned goods to confiscate them without adjudication—actually suspending Consular law to enable such outrages to be committed,—which he observed he invariably ratified. He assigned to the Mandarins the right to levy transit duty on produce which had to pass through districts in the undisputed possession of the Taipings, who of course always levied fees of the same nature; and he actually allowed Silk to be seized and confiscated simply and solely because it was not voluntarily reported on arriving within the British lines, in addition to the chops of a boat which had but just been established, and which these in charge of the Silk knew nothing about; and more than all these things and many more to obtain influence with the Mandarins, and although the expediency of treating them with consideration, courtesy and moderation cannot be doubted, still the conduct of Sir F. Bruce in forcing the above assistance and advantages on them before they were asked for or even dreamed of, as though he were afraid of being with him and disgusted at him if the obligation was not forced to the acceptance of that help which he had himself so earnestly sought for and so strongly condemned. Such intended ungraciousness is quite beyond the compass of the mind of a Mandarin to appreciate, and it may readily be supposed that the immediate danger over, their pride revolted at the recollection of their humiliation, and they looked with deep suspicion at the motives which had induced the granting of the assistance which had saved them.

The designs of Mr. Lay in the dishonest attempt to make to invest himself with the sole direction of the Anglo-Chinese fleet, has doubtless tended to give a hostile shape to these Mandarin suspicions, but still it is undeniable, that Sir F. Bruce's infatuated unconsciousness towards the Mandarins, entirely failed to inspire the smallest feeling of gratitude or confidence, and that at the present moment the repulsence and the hatred of the Mandarins towards foreigners, especially British, never were greater. After the worst of it is, that the lesson which their humiliation taught them has been thrown away by the line of conduct on the part of Sir F. Bruce, causing a return of those vapid pretensions, of that overweening conceit, of that claim to superiority which have ever been the characteristics of the rulers of the "Middle Kingdom."

These are not prognostications as to what may occur, but are deductions of what has happened. For instance. A British soldier, one of the guard of the Peking legation, was killed some little time since—the report issued of the occurrence was not the one sent, although it omitted the British Minister as he was meant to do. The fact was that the man was brutally murdered by a large body of Mandarin soldiers, who, even had the poor man's conduct been ever so violent, which there is no evidence to prove that it was, were sufficiently strong to capture him. The man's death was never reported and would not have been known but for the accidental discovery of his body. The circumstance developed a strong anti-foreign feeling at Peking which had not previously manifested itself. Placards appeared on the walls calling on the people to rise and exterminate the foreigners, and members of the foreign legations were insulted in the streets, which had never previously occurred.

The upper classes appear to be extremely ill informed, and much excited against foreigners. The idea of accepting foreign aid in the capture of Nanking is indignantly repelled, and a sort of bravado held out that when Tseng-kwo-fan shall have taken that stronghold, his attention will be directed towards foreigners. This feeling is very prevalent and explains in a measure Tseng-kwo-fan's otherwise inexplicable refusal of foreign aid in a task which he can never accomplish without it.

Nor can it be argued for one moment that this anti-foreign feeling is confined to the people, and is not openly participated in by the Mandarins. The following incidents serve to illustrate forcibly the position of foreign political relations at Peking.

A Danish Minister lately arrived in China, and having occasion to visit Peking, took up his quarters at the British Legation. The object of his visit can only be surmised, nor has anything transpired as to the treatment he received at the hands of the Chinese Government, but after he had left, Prince Kung addressed a Circular despatch to all the foreign Missions expressing his disapprobation at the British Minister's visit, and desiring that no foreigner whatever might be received at the Legations, nor indeed be allowed to visit Peking at all without a passport. The Russian Minister in acknowledging this despatch, animadverted on its impropriety—the French Minister, simply owned its receipt, whilst the British Minister fully concurred in its tenor, and promised to use his endeavors to carry out the Prince's views. And this indeed will be found to indicate the course generally adopted in all such matters.

Another case illustrative of the growing hauteur and repellence of the Mandarins is the following. The Queen of Spain lately equipped a diplomatic mission for the purpose of arranging a treaty with the Imperial government. The mission arrived at the mouth of the Peiho in a man of war, when a Secretary was sent to Peking to arrange preliminaries. This officer's passport was demanded, and as he was not provided with such an instrument, he was disconteously ordered away. He pleaded the nature of his office but in vain.

Again,—about two years since the Portuguese had a treaty with the Chinese Government. This, the Governor of Macao went up a few weeks since to exchange the ratifications of. After the usual dilly dallying, the mandarins refused to ratify, objecting to one of the clauses which arranged for the cession of Macao. The consequence was an abrupt termination of negotiations, the Portuguese envoy wisely desisting all discussion and satisfying himself with an indignant protest. As the treaty was made at Peking under the direct auspices of the Chinese cabinet, the refusal to ratify it is simply an act of bad faith unprovoked by discourtesy—because even if the Chinese Government had changed their minds on the subject, they should have communicated with the Macao authorities, and not have allowed the whole legation to have gone up on a wild goose chase.

These experiments may prove dangerous, inasmuch as a couple of small men of war may at any time blockade the Peiho.

Sir F. Bruce, the British minister, proceeds to England by this mail. He leaves the legation in charge of his secretary, Mr. Wade, once a mercenary in the Chinese Custom House. This mercenary is a notorious Mandarin worshipper, and officer is notorious Mandarin worshipper, and is little likely to improve relations.

Regarding affairs on the Yangtsze in connexion with the Taiping rebellion. The insurgents still hold Hoochow and Nanking; without any apparent prospect of their being ousted. Late advices state that the Taipings had penetrated into the Green Tea districts of Khagsi, and had taken three walled cities.

The French are manifesting considerable political aggression at Ningpo. They have established a sort of a dock yard and machine factory there, and having by some means obtained some steam engines, they are constructing a flotilla of gun boats to take the place of the Lay-Osborn fleet. The matter looks serious, for the conduct of the British government in the affair of that fleet, has rendered it the fixed opinion of the Mandarins

PENINSULAR & ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

NOTICE OF REDUCTION OF PASSAGE MONEY.

IN the year 1857 the Directors made a considerable reduction in the Company's rates of Passage Money, which continued in force till 1861.
In that year owing to the extraordinary rise in the Cost and Freight of Coals, and the enhanced price of all descriptions of Naval Stores, the Directors were reluctantly compelled to return to the rates of Passage Money previously in force.
They are now happy to state that a decrease in the price of Coal and other expenses of Steam Navigation enables them to reduce the Company's Passage rates to the undermentioned scale, which will take effect from and after the 1st June next, viz:—
